HELPING CHILDREN BUILD THEIR EMOTIONAL LITERACY.

Children who have the skills to express their emotions have a higher chance of understanding those of others. A way to help your children build their emotional literacy would be to play; how you feel if....? On your drive to and from school you could ask your child about situations that happen when children are together - ask your child "How would you feel if happened to you? Example: Juliet wanted to play ball with Katie and Lucy, but they wouldn't let her. How do you think you would feel if that happened to you? What could Juliet try next time. If you would like more resources on this please contact your child's teacher or site supervisor.
